

I am Mutsuo Inaoka from Japan.

Please call me Mark.

Currently, I run the company Global-C, which I founded in July, 2004.

Before that, I worked at Harima Chemical for twenty years. During my first four years with the company, I worked in Japan, but after that I was sent to Brazil for two years.

From Brazil, I was sent to the U.S., where I worked for fourteen years.

At Harima, I worked in various areas including accounting, finance, exporting, and international management.

At Global-C, which offers M&A and management consulting to companies trying to enter foreign markets, I frequently drawn on experience I gained at Harima.

Because we are also interested in Global Communication—thus, the name Global-C—we currently run an EELearning service offering fun, internet-based services ranging from translation to lessons to improve pronunciation to copywriting in eight languages.

In the near future, we are planning to add a number of other businesses including a website to reach the special needs of seniors and cell phone-based services.
